DOES YOUR HOMEOWNERS POLICY PROTECT YOU FROM FARMING RISKS?

You have a passion for your land, it's more than just a hobby it is a life-style. And whether you run a small roadside stand, sell your wares at local farmers markets, grow your own food or board a few horses – you are at risk for property or liability losses that a typical homeowners policy doesn't cover.

WHAT DOES HOMEOWNERS INSURANCE COVER?

Homeowners insurance typically covers your dwelling, its surrounding property and the property inside the home. The policy also protects you from liability for accidents that take place on your property.

WHAT ABOUT FARMING RISKS?

Farming property and activities require their own coverages for structures like barns, silos and fencing and equipment and property such as tack, tractors, supplies and tools, hay or livestock. You may need added liability coverage if you own or board horses or participate in horse-related activities or if you sell products such as fruit, vegetables or cheeses.

HOME VS FARM

What you really need to find out is if you are protected for the farm-related business activities conducted on your property. It is important to understand that a typical homeowners policy is not adequate to protect you for these activities. Even if your agent modifies your homeowners policy with a special endorsement, you may still have gaps in your coverage. In addition, there are special considerations if you own animals such as horses, cows or goats.

COUNTRY ESTATE INSURANCE

Our Country Estate insurance is designed for someone like you – a small-scale farmer who owns acreage used for pleasure or profit, but whose primary income is from another occupation. We offer built-in, pre-packaged property and liability coverages for both farm and residence. If you own horses, Country Estate Equine offers additional coverage for certain horse-related activities.
